Hand Rejuvenation

Our hands receive more exposure to sunlight than any other part of our body. This is why our hands are one of the first places to start showing visible signs of aging. Some of these signs include age spots and precancerous growths. A loss of fatty tissue also occurs, making our hands look bony. Today one can combat these signs of aging with a simple procedure called hand rejuvenation. Hand rejuvenation treatments can help restore the hands to a more youthful appearance.

What options are available?

Your skin care specialist has many treatment options available to rejuvenate the appearance of our hands. More than one session or a combination treatment may be recommended in order to get the results your expect. Most hand rejuvenation treatments include one or more of the following procedures.

- Chemical Peel: When applied to the skin, a chemical peel lightly exfoliates the damaged outer layers of skin. This not only encourages newer healthy skin to grow but it also helps to tighten the skin and fade away any age spots and/or freckles on the skin.
- Microdermabrasion: This is a superficial skin peel procedure that involves massaging away the first layer of skin with tiny crystals. Though this treatment is mild and may need multiple sessions, results include tighter skin, new collagen growth, and lightening of unwanted skin pigments with no discomfort or downtime.

- Laser Skin Resurfacing: Some of the most dramatic results can be obtained with the use of a laser. When used in the hands of a skilled skin care specialist, a laser can safely remove unsightly veins, age spots, wrinkles and help to stimulate new collagen growth for a long-term affect.
- Injectable fillers: Often times as the skin on our hands begins to thin, fat and collagen deposits begin to be reduced. This leaves our hands appearing "old and bony". Often times this can be fixed by injecting a filler substance into the hands. Today many substances can plump up the skin and give your hands a more youthful appearance.

- Sclerotherapy: If unsightly veins on your hands are making them look older than they really are, they can be removed by sclerotherapy. Here, a sclerosing solution is injected into the unwanted veins. This causes the vein to be slowly dissolved pain-free.

What can I expect?

You don't have to let your hands make you look and feel older than you really are. With modern cosmetic treatment options, your skin care specialist can improve the appearance of your hands. Loose skin can be tightened, lines and wrinkles can be softened, age spots can be erased and the signs of excessive sun exposure can be diminished.
