Tattoo Removal

Physicians recently have discovered ways to remove unwanted tattoos. A procedure using the YAG laser breaks the pigment into tiny particles that the body can then digest. It works best for tattoos containing black, blue and red color. Anywhere from 1-10 treatments are needed depending of the size and color of the tattoo.

Mini Face Lift

An extensive procedure that removes excessive skin caused from loss of elasticity. Liposuction of the chin area may be used in conjunction with this procedure.

Blepharoplasty

A surgical procedure that removes excessive fat and skin from the upper and lower eyelids.

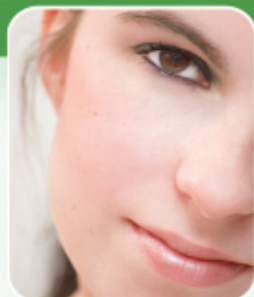

A consultation is needed prior to any procedures done at the clinic for your safety. If you are interested in a procedure listed here or would like information on other more extensive procedures please make an appointment to speak with a skilled professional.

Microdermabrasion

A physical superficial exfoliation of the skin used to improve your tone, texture and clarity. This is also considered a "lunch-time peel". You are able to leave your appointment with minimal redness allowing you to continue with your normal daily activities. Several treatments are needed depending on the desired results.

Chemical Peels

Using chemicals such as Alpha-hydroxy acids or Salicylic acid to remove the outer layer of skin to improve the skin's tone and clarity. Depending on the depth of removal, multiple types of chemical peels are available. For more dramatic results for example, a TCA peel is a more suitable option. This peel removes deeper layers of skin with a week or two of downtime.

Botox

Botulinum Toxin or Botox is now being used to treat wrinkles. The small amount used paralyzes the muscles resulting in temporary atrophy. Botox is typically used in the top 1/3 of the face, such as the forehead, between the brows and the crow's feet. This treatment is needed every 3-6 months. For other problematic areas, collagen replacement can also be used. Bovine collagen is injected into the wrinkles to plump them up. Treatments are needed also every 3-6 months.

Laser Hair Reduction

Problematic hair can now be reduced with the use of a laser. Individuals with dark hair and light skin are the best candidates. The laser retards the growth of the hair resulting in a lighter, softer and reduced amount of hair. Multiple treatments are needed and vary according to the area treated.

Liposuction

The basics of liposuction are quite simple. A small stainless steel tube called a cannula is inserted through tiny incisions in the skin and the fat is removed using suction. The abdomen, hips, thighs, legs and lovehandles are most frequently treated. Swelling gradually improves in three months with optimum results seen around the sixth month.

Sclerotherapy

Sclerotherapy involves the injection of a substance called sotradecol into the veins causing them to sclerose or die. During the session you may experience a burning and cramping sensation which is typically short lived. Support Hose are to be worn after the treatment for the first two weeks. Depending on the severity, several sessions are needed for best results.

Hair Loss

Hair transplantation or grafting, sometimes done in conjunction with scalp reduction, is a procedure that produces very favorable results for many people. A strip of abundant hair called a donor site is removed and replaced in the sparse area of the scalp. After an estimated 3 months, new hair begins to grow in the original pattern.
